Hipotesis

- Violence and crime are more common in cities with low competitiveness, understood as little ability to attract and retain investment, either by its legal framework or the performance of its people.
- The phenomenon is not necessarily linked to poverty, but can be influenced by it.
- These are areas where there are not enough public services or support networks (kindergartens, schools, high-schools, hospitals).
- I.e.: Northern Border (after NAFTA), Touristic cities (Acapulco, Cuernavaca)
