

Amy Karpel
Associate General Counsel
Office of the US Trade Representative
International Studies 1996

Amy has been an Associate General Counsel at the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) in Washington, DC for five years. USTR is part of the Executive Office of the President and the U.S. federal agency responsible for developing and implementing U.S. international trade policy. Among other responsibilities, Amy has litigated international trade dispute before the World Trade Organization and negotiated and drafted texts for U.S. free trade agreements with Korea, Peru, Columbia, Oman, Panama, and Central America Prior to USTR, Amy practiced international trade law as an associate at Stewart and Stewart, a law firm in Washington, DC. Amy is a graduate of American University, Washington College of Law in Washington, DC and the Jackson School, University of Washington.

Last updated: 2009