2.2 Project Summary

Over the past decade there have been numerous natural and manmade disasters within the Americas that have exposed the need for tailored legislation and institutional reorganization in the area of disaster and emergency preparedness and management. In recent years Caribbean region has shown itself to be physically and geographically vulnerable to natural disasters. This vulnerability has revealed inadequacies in the necessary legal and regulatory framework, particularly relevant legislation to support both operational and financial responsiveness.

The adequacy and efficacy of the existing legal and institutional frameworks in the Caribbean to facilitate efficient and coordinated preparation and response activities to natural disasters, including, but not limited to, warning and communications systems, declarations of emergency, identification and mitigation of hazards and risks, emergency funding, evacuation, international humanitarian relief, and recovery, is below the standard required to meet the desired responsiveness for, and in some instances curtails the ability of the government to aptly manage, the numerous types of natural disasters facing the region.

The primary goal of Component II of the Caribbean Emergency Legislation Project 2009 consultancies is to compare and analyse the existing legal and institutional frameworks for emergency response, in civil and common law countries around the world, with special attention to countries of the Americas (North, Central and South) and to ascertain whether parts of these frameworks could serve as models or provide foundations for an improved legal and institutional framework in the Caribbean, considering current legislative and administrative gaps.

This proposal addresses the issues contemplated by the Request for Proposals and issues not considered, and proposes methodologies to achieve the desired output.

SECTION 4: APPROACH, METHODOLOGY & WORK PLAN

4.1. Our Understanding of the Project & the Required Knowledge

In recent years, several Caribbean States have had to respond to natural and man-made disasters and emergencies. These have included hurricanes, earth quakes, floods, volcanic eruptions and military coups. These experiences illustrate that there is need to strengthen and improve the legal, regulatory and institutional frameworks to provide optimal disaster management geared to safeguarding life and property. Some Caribbean States stated to take legislative steps to address some of the needs of a legal and regulatory framework to deal with emergencies while others have not. This is will be addressed as part of the Component I “assessment of national legal and institutional frameworks related to state of emergency and budget appropriation, including budget execution, and procurement” of this three component consultancy.

Bearing in mind that jurisdictions in the Americas and beyond have addressed the legal and regulatory issues relevant to natural disasters and emergencies, it will be important that the Caribbean response be guided as best as possible by the lessons learnt from other jurisdictions. We see these lessons as critical to this consultancy. This consultancy will therefore ascertain whether parts of the frameworks in North, Central and South America as well as in other jurisdictions could serve as models or provide foundations for an improved legal and institutional framework in the Caribbean, considering current legislative and administrative gaps. This consultancy therefore requires an in-depth working knowledge of the national laws in Caribbean as well as practical experience in several areas, these include:

- Legislative interpretation & analysis
- Institutional assessment, capacity building and reorganization
- Caribbean socioeconomic and cultural dynamics
- Public policy analysis and assessment
- Research & Writing
