I. Introduction

The Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts (hereinafter, the “Mexico Convention”) was adopted in 1994 at the Fifth Inter-American Specialized Conference on Private International Law (CIDIP-V)1 organized under the auspices of the Organization of American States (OAS) pursuant to Article 122 of the OAS Charter.2 It was signed by Bolivia, Brazil, Mexico, Uruguay and Venezuela, ratified by Venezuela and Mexico, entered into force on December 15, 1996; no reservations or declarations were made by any signatories.3

The aim of this paper is to outline the accomplishments of the Mexico Convention, evaluate its contributions to date and consider how to enhance its effectiveness. To that end, the paper will analyze the influence exerted by the Mexico Convention in the shaping of recent international and domestic instruments and discuss several mechanisms for its furtherance in the development of international contract law in the Americas.

II. The Mexico Convention – A Brief Overview

A. Within the CIDIP Process

Throughout the 1970’s and 1980’s, OAS Member States took steps to harmonize and codify substantive law and choice-of-law rules in a number of different topics in private international law. This was achieved primarily through the specialized conferences, specifically CIDIPs I through IV, held in 1975, 1979, 1984 and 1989, respectively.

The subject of international contractual arrangements was first considered in 1979 at CIDIP-II in Montevideo.4 The topic was included later in 1989 in the agenda of CIDIP-IV and assigned to Commission II, which considered a study prepared by an expert in the field, Professor Antonio Boggiano, and a draft convention submitted by the Mexican delegation.5 As no general consensus on a formal instrument was reached, a set of principles was adopted for future deliberation and a resolution was adopted recommending that the OAS General Assembly convene a meeting of experts.6 These principles also served as the basis for a draft and report that was entrusted by the Inter-American Juridical Committee (IAJC) to rapporteur Lic. Jose Luis Siqueiros and which was approved by the IAJC in July 1991.7

2 Article 122 provides that “the Specialized Conferences are intergovernmental meetings to deal with special technical matters or to develop specific aspects of Inter-American cooperation [and] they shall be held when either the General Assembly or the Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs so decides.”

That draft convention and report were discussed at a meeting of experts in Tucson, Arizona from November 11-14, 1993.\textsuperscript{8} This meeting resulted in the adoption of a revised new draft –“Proyecto de Convención Interamericana sobre el Derecho Aplicable a la Contratación Internacional”.\textsuperscript{9} The Tucson draft formed the basis for discussions at CIDIP-V that took place from March 14-18, 1994 in Mexico City and for the final text that was adopted as the Mexico Convention.\textsuperscript{10} The preparatory work had included the circulation of a questionnaire to OAS Member States as well as extensive review of other relevant instruments on the topic.\textsuperscript{11} CIDIP-V was attended by representatives of 17 Latin American States as well as the United States and Canada and thus, arguably, the text represents consensus of a considerable number of states from both civil and common law traditions.\textsuperscript{12}

B. Scope, Application and Exclusions

The Mexico Convention determines the law applicable to international contracts (Article 1) and will apply to new modalities of contracts that arise as international trade develops (Article 3). A contract is considered “international” if the parties have their habitual residence or establishment in different States Parties or if the contract has connections with more than one State Party (Article 1, second paragraph). The Mexico Convention also applies to contracts to which States or State agencies or entities are party, unless expressly excluded (Article 1, third sentence).

As set forth in Article 14, the law applicable to the contract as determined by Chapter 2 governs principally the following: its interpretation; rights and obligations of the parties; performance of obligations and consequences of non-performance; ways that obligations are extinguished; and consequences of nullity or invalidity.

Article 5 expressly excludes the following: issues related to civil status; capacity and consequences or nullity or invalidity as a result of lack of capacity; succession and testamentary matters; marital and family relationships. Also excluded are obligations deriving from negotiable instruments and securities; agreements concerning arbitration or selection of forum; and issues of company law. Additionally, upon ratification or accession, States may declare categories of contracts to which the Mexico Convention shall not apply (Article 1, third sentence).

C. Primary Principles

1. Party Autonomy

The core principle of the Mexico Convention is party autonomy. It is expressly stated in Article 7 that “(t)he contract shall be governed by the law chosen by the parties” […] “even if said law is that of a State that is not a party” (Article 2). Such choice need not be express but can be implied on the basis of the parties’ behavior and the clauses of the contract considered as a whole (Article 7, second sentence). The parties may select the applicable law for the entire contract or only a part (Article 7, third sentence).

Party autonomy is said to be the cornerstone of the modern law of contract and “one of the most widely accepted paradigms of contemporary private international law.”13 The rationale behind this principle is that the parties to a contract are in the best position to determine which set of legal principles is most suitable for their transaction, instead of submitting their fate to the will of the legislator or judge. However, the freedom of the parties to choose the applicable law that will govern their contract is also subject to clearly defined limits: the public order restrictions of Article 18 and the mandatory provisions requirements of Article 11. Under Article 18, the law chosen by the parties may be excluded “when it is manifestly contrary to the public order of the forum.” Under Article 11, “the provisions of the law of the forum shall necessarily be applied when they are mandatory” and that the forum has discretion, when it considers it relevant, to apply the mandatory provisions of the law of another State with which the contract has close connections.

2. The Proximity Principle

The Mexico Convention also envisages a solution in cases of absence of an effective choice of law by the parties. Under Article 9, “(i)f the parties have not selected the applicable law, or if their selection proves ineffective, the contract shall be governed by the law of the State with which it has the closest ties (i.e., connections),”14 a concept known as the “proximity principle.” For such purposes, “the Court will take into account all objective and subjective elements of the contract […]” (Article 9, second paragraph). Objective elements may include the places of execution and performance of the contract, the domicile and the nationality of the parties; subjective elements may include the balance of interests, significant connections, and the characteristic performance test.15

3. General Principles of International Commercial Law

For purposes of determining the applicable law, Article 9 stipulates that the Court shall also take into account the general principles of international commercial law recognized by international organizations.16

14 In the Rome Convention (see below), Article 4, paragraph1 states that “the contract shall be governed by the law of the country with which it is most closely connected” (emphasis added) and in the Spanish text, “el contrato se regirá por la ley del país con el que presente los vínculos más estrechos” which is the identical language used in the Spanish text of the Mexico Convention.
16 In the Spanish version, the term is “organismos internacionales.” According to Article 30 of the Mexico Convention, the texts in each of the four languages are all equally authentic. The English term, “international organization” is more restricted, being limited to multilateral, inter-governmental organizations. The Spanish term is broader and might also include non-governmental organizations, business and professional associations.
Various international entities have crafted rules that encapsulate some of these principles that are used to fill in missing gaps in the collective body of legislation relevant to international trade and commerce. The international organizations in particular include the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL), the Hague Conference on Private International Law (HCCH) and the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law (UNIDROIT) and other international entities involved in this work include, for example the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC). Of all of these, the UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts (hereinafter, the “UNIDROIT Principles”) are widely accepted as the codification of lex mercatoria.\(^{17}\) One view is that by making reference to these principles, the Mexico Convention indirectly incorporates them and serves to reinforce the “basis upon which the system of laws is adopted and codified by all commercial nations”\(^{18}\) and that by doing so, it also embodies lex mercatoria as an additional element that shall be taken into consideration, among others, to determine the applicable law. Others have concerns over the open language of Article 9 (see discussion, below).

III. The Mexico Convention in Historical Perspective

Regardless of the number of its signatories and ratifications, the Mexico Convention has been widely recognized as a significant step in the progressive development of international contract law. Given that party autonomy is such a foundational part of the Mexico Convention and represents such a fundamental change in the Americas, it may be useful to consider the development of the Mexico Convention in its historical context.

A. Early Developments

Generally speaking, a contract is an agreement entered into between parties of their own free will and with the ability to set their own terms. This “freedom of contract”\(^{19}\) is considered essential to enable each party to negotiate the best bargain possible and thereby preserve Adam Smith’s concept of the invisible hand and self-regulation of the marketplace. To be enforceable, of course, that contract must be made in compliance with a body of law recognized by the court or entity that would be called upon if so required. In this way, the balance is maintained between freedom of contract and the public interest. When contracts are made between parties in different jurisdictions, the question arises over which body of law should govern the contract and secondly, whether the parties have “party autonomy” to make that determination themselves.

\(^{19}\) In this paper, “freedom of contract” refers to the parties’ authority to set their own contractual terms, whereas “party autonomy” strictly speaking, refers to the parties’ authority to choose the law that will govern the contract. This is consistent with the approach taken in the Hague Principles, explained in the Commentary as follows: “Parties’ choice of law must be distinguished from the primary contractual arrangement (main contract). Parties may choose the applicable law in their main contract or in a separate agreement. The parties’ choice of law must also be distinguished from “forum selection clauses” or “choice of court clauses” or “arbitration clauses.” Commentary 1.6 & 1.7, page 23. However, some of the latter have been used in this paper as illustrations to evidence the general trend towards greater party “authority” over their transactions and matters related to it, including the law that governs it and how disputes should be resolved and by which courts.
In Latin America, the road towards recognition of the principle of party autonomy has been arduous and long. Although party autonomy was one of the fundamental principles of the Napoleonic Code and many of the codes that were developed from it, this was not so in Latin America, where the principle of territoriality was paramount. This principle holds that “every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory. The direct consequence is that the laws of every state affect and bind directly all property, whether real or personal, within its territory and all persons who are resident within it, whether natural born subjects or aliens, and also all contracts made and acts done within it.”\(^\text{20}\) The principle is simple and provides a single point of attachment at any given time; a person or piece of property is either inside or outside the territory and therefore only subject to one sovereign at a single point of time. This principle is well-embedded in private international law. When embarking upon a conflict of laws analysis, an initial starting point is to consider a few basic maxims, one of which is the principle of territoriality.

Certain key instruments in private international law, such as the 1889 Montevideo Treaties on Private International Law, implicitly outlawed party autonomy.\(^\text{21}\) This was made more explicit in the 1940 Montevideo Treaty on International Civil Law, which established that an international contract’s center of gravity is the place of its performance (\textit{lex executionis}). Pursuant to Article 37 of this Treaty, the \textit{lex executionis} governs all fundamental aspects of the contract, such as its: a) existence; b) nature; c) validity; d) effect; e) consequence; and f) performance.\(^\text{22}\) When it becomes impossible to determine the place where the contract is to be performed, the subsidiary connection factor set forth by Article 40 shall be applied, namely, the place of conclusion of the contract (\textit{lex celebrationis}).\(^\text{23}\) These principles provided a straightforward and clear methodology for the determination of choice of law in conflicts of laws related to contractual matters and were widely used throughout much of Latin America.

\textbf{B. Developments After 1950}

In the second half of the last century, there is evidence of movement away from adherence to the maxim of territoriality and the private international law principles that followed it. This appears to have taken place in Latin America while at the same time the principle of party autonomy gained broader recognition in the codification process at the international and regional levels, as illustrated below.\(^\text{24}\)

1. UN Convention on the International Sale of Goods

The “CISG” was adopted in 1980 and entered into force in 1988. Under Article 6 parties may exclude application of the CISG and, subject to limitations, may derogate from it or vary effect of its provisions; as this may be achieved, for example, by choosing the law of a non-contracting state or the substantive domestic law of a contracting state as the law applicable to the contract, the CISG recognizes the principle of party autonomy.25

Preparation of a uniform law for the international sale of goods had started much earlier, in 1930 at UNIDROIT. That early draft was submitted to the Hague Conference in 1964, which adopted two conventions, one on the international sale of goods and the other on the formation of contracts for the international sale of goods. These drafts were widely criticized at the time as reflecting primarily the legal traditions of Western Europe. In the subsequent work by UNCITRAL, which combined the subject matter of the two prior conventions, modifications were considered that might achieve wider acceptance by countries of different legal systems. The result was the CISG, to which the original signatories included states from every geographic region, stage of economic development and legal system.26 Today the CISG is widely accepted with 84 parties worldwide and it is in force throughout most of the Americas.27

2. Convention on the Law Applicable to Contractual Obligations

The “Rome Convention” was signed in 1980 and entered into force in 1991.28 Article 3, paragraph 1, states the general rule that “a contract shall be governed by the law chosen by the parties.” Although parties to the Rome Convention are (only) the members of the European Union, and although since 2008 it has been largely replaced,29 it serves as another example of the progressive codification of the principle of party autonomy.

3. UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts

The first set of the UNIDROIT Principles was completed in 1994, which was followed by second and third editions in 2004 and 2010, respectively.30 As provided in the preamble, the principles apply when the parties have agreed that their contract be governed by them or that their contract be governed by general principles of law or lex mercatoria;31 party autonomy is thereby implicitly recognized. Freedom of contract is expressly recognized in Article 1.1 which states that: “the parties are free to enter into a contract and to determine its content.”

27 The CISG is in force throughout the Americas with the exception of Bolivia, Venezuela, Surinam, Panama, Nicaragua, Belize, Guatemala and Costa Rica. In the Caribbean, it is in force in Cuba and Dominican Republic. www.uncitral.org 29 It has been largely replaced by the Rome I Regulation.
30 http://www.unidroit.org/instruments/commercial-contracts/unidroit-principles-2010
31 The preamble also provides that they may be applied when the parties have not chosen any governing law, or to interpret or supplement international instruments or domestic law.
The topic had first been included in UNIDROIT’s work program in 1971 and in 1980 a working group was established that included representatives of all the major legal systems of the world; the eventual end product has been described as being a set of principles that “reflect concepts to be found in many, if not all, legal systems.”32 Efforts were made to achieve consistency with the CISG and to follow that convention “with such adaptations as were considered appropriate.”33 The most recent 2010 edition has been unanimously endorsed by UNCITRAL.34 UNIDROIT membership includes 13 OAS Member States (Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, United States, Uruguay and Venezuela), whose date of membership pre-dates the 1994 Principles.35 Once again, arguably, the work product reflects a consensus achieved with the participation of these States.

4. Arbitration Conventions – New York and Panama

The Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards, (the 1958 “New York Convention”) provides in Article II, paragraph 1, as follows: “(e)ach Contracting State shall recognize an agreement in writing under which the parties undertake to submit to arbitration all or any differences which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of a defined legal relationship whether contractual or not, concerning a subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration.”36 Similarly, the Inter-American Convention on International Commercial Arbitration, (the 1975 “Panama Convention”) provides in Article 1 as follows: “(a)n agreement in which the parties undertake to submit to arbitral decision any differences that may arise or have arisen between them with respect to a commercial transaction is valid.”37 Although these provisions do not specifically authorize party autonomy in respect of choice of law, such recognition, arguably, is implied. It has been noted that, “party autonomy allows the parties to choose arbitration rather than litigation; to choose the laws and make the rules which govern the arbitral proceedings; and to be reasonably confident that the arbitral award will be legally binding and enforceable.”38 Accordingly, the States parties to these conventions recognize the authority of parties to make a choice of “law”, at least as far as arbitration is concerned. Of 34 OAS Member States, 28 have ratified the New York Convention39 and 19 have ratified the Panama Convention.40

5. MERCOSUR – Buenos Aires Protocol

In 1994 the States parties to the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR) agreed on the Buenos Aires Protocol on Jurisdiction in Contractual Matters, which in its preamble recognizes “the need to provide the States Parties' private sector with a framework of legal security that will guarantee just solutions and international harmony in judicial and arbitration related decisions associated with contracting in the context of the Treaty of Asuncion” and “the importance of adopting common rules on international jurisdiction in contractual matters” and “that, in the area of international business, contracting is the legal format of the commerce that takes place in connection with the integration process.”

This document provides in Article 4 that “in disputes that arise in international contracts concerning civil or commercial matters, the courts of the State Party to whose jurisdiction the contracting parties have agreed in writing to submit, shall have jurisdiction, provided that this agreement has not been obtained abusively.” Once again, although this does not constitute express recognition of party autonomy insofar as a choice of governing law clause per se, it evidences the progressive pattern that had been emerging in the Americas.

6. Mexico Convention

At the same time as these developments, work was being undertaken at the OAS that led to the adoption of the Mexico Convention, including inter alia the preparatory work at the Tucson meeting of experts, as has been described above.

7. Hague Principles

The most recent development in the progression towards the embodiment of the principle of party autonomy has been the adoption of the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Commercial Contracts, discussed below.

IV. Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Commercial Contracts

A. A Brief Overview

The instrument is a non-binding set of principles that the Hague Conference “encourages States to incorporate into their domestic choice of law regimes.” It is expected that “(i)n this way, the Principles can guide the reform of domestic law on choice of law and operate alongside existing instruments on the subject (see Rome I Regulation and Mexico City Convention both of which embrace and apply the concept of party autonomy.)[Emphasis added].” As provided in the preamble, they are intended to serve as a “model for national, regional, supranational or international instruments” and as a guide to “interpret, supplement and develop rules of private international law.” Work on the Hague Principles began in 2006 and as already noted, one of the sources used in the development was the Mexico Convention and the commentary makes frequent mention of it. The Hague Principles consist of a preamble and 12 articles, accompanied by explanatory article-by-article commentaries. They were completed and formally approved on March 19, 2015 and received endorsement by UNCITRAL in July, 2015.

Membership in the Hague Conference includes 12 states from Latin America (Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay and Venezuela) plus Canada and the United States.45

B. Scope, Application and Exclusions

Scope of Application: As noted in the preamble and in Article 1, the Hague Principles apply (only) to choice of law in international commercial contacts. Thus, the scope is more limited than the Mexico Convention which contains substantive provisions in addition to choice of law rules.

Secondly, for the Hague Principles to apply, two criteria must be met. The first, that the contract must be “international”, is also a requirement of the Mexico Convention.46 The second criterion is that each party must be acting “in the exercise of its trade or profession.”47 The Hague Principles are limited to international commercial contracts and specifically “do not apply to consumer or employment contracts.”48 This is a further reduction in scope by comparison with the Mexico Convention (although see “exclusions” below).49 In fact, it was concerns that the Mexico Convention was overly broad in scope that led to reticence on the part of some states and impetus for further work, specifically in relation to consumer protection.50 The approach taken by the Hague Principles is clear and straightforward because they “expressly exclude from their scope certain specific categories of contracts in which the bargaining power of one party—a consumer or employee—is presumptively weaker.”51

Scope of Choice of Law: As set forth in Article 9 of the Hague Principles (and parallel to Article 14 of the Mexico Convention), the law chosen by the parties governs all aspects of the contract, including: its interpretation; rights and obligations; performance and consequences of non-performance; ways that obligations are extinguished; and consequences of nullity or

45 https://www.hcch.net/en/states/hcch-members
46 Although the definitions and approach are inverse, the result is (or should be) essentially the same. Under the Hague Principles the contract is considered international if the stipulated provisions are met whereas under the Mexico Convention, the contract is considered international if the stipulated provisions are met. (Compare Hague Principles, Article 1(2) “a contract is international unless each party has its establishment in the same State and the relationship of the parties and all other relevant elements, regardless of the chosen law, are connected only with that State” and the Mexico Convention, Article 1, first paragraph.
47 Article 1(1).
48 Article 1(1).
49 By contrast, under the Mexico Convention, “all” international contracts are first captured under Article 1 and then some are excluded under Article 5.
50 Consumer protection was one of the topics selected for consideration at CIDIP-VII.
invalidity. The Hague Principles add two additional itemized inclusions: burden of proof and legal presumptions and pre-contractual obligations.

Exclusions: Because the Hague Principles are limited only to international commercial contracts, there was no need to stipulate a similarly wide range of exclusions as in the Mexico Convention (which expressly excludes, inter alia, issues related to civil status; succession and testamentary matters; marital and family relationships.) Both instruments (Hague Principles, Article 1(3); Mexico Convention Article 5) exclude the law governing the following: capacity of natural persons; agreements on arbitration and choice of court; companies and insolvency. The Hague Principles also exclude trusts, proprietary effects of contracts and certain issues of agency.

C. Primary Principles

1. Party Autonomy

As stated in the introduction, “at their core, the Hague Principles are designed to promote party autonomy in international commercial contracts” and as per Article 1 “they affirm the principle of party autonomy with limited exceptions.” The commentary notes that “many states have reached the conclusion (that) party autonomy…enhances certainty and predictability within the parties’ primary contractual arrangement and recognizes that parties to a contract may be in the best position to determine which set of principles is most suitable for their transaction.” Accordingly, “party autonomy is the predominant view today. However this concept is not yet applied everywhere.”

Consistent with this principle, the parties may choose the law of any state or “laws that are generally accepted on an international, supranational or regional level” such as the UNIDROIT Principles. They may choose the law applicable to the whole contract or only a part, different laws for different parts of the contract, and they may make or modify their choice at any time. Moreover, there need not be any connection between the law chosen and the parties or their transaction.

Similarly to the Mexico Convention, the limitations to party autonomy are overriding mandatory rules and public policy (ordre public) as outlined in Article 11. Its purpose is to ensure that the choice of the law by the parties “does not have the effect of excluding certain rules and policies that are of fundamental importance to States.”

2. The Proximity Principle – NOT

52 These 5 items are the same as those contained in Article 14 of the Mexico Convention.
55 Ibid.
56 Hague Principles, Article 3 (unless the law of the forum provides otherwise).
57 Ibid, Article 2.
58 The Mexico Convention contains comparable provisions in Article 11 for mandatory rules and Article 18 for public policy considerations.
However, unlike the Mexico Convention, the Hague Principles do not provide rules for determining the applicable law in the absence of a choice by the parties. As explained in the commentary, this is because firstly, “the goal of the Principles is to further party autonomy rather than provide a comprehensive body of principles for the law determining the law applicable to international commercial contracts (and) secondly, because a consensus with respect to (such rules) in the absence of choice is currently lacking.”

3. General Principles of International Commercial Law

Article 3 of the Hague Principles state the “the law chosen by the parties may be rules of law that are generally accepted on an international, supranational or regional level.” This is described by the commentary as one of the more novel solutions offered by the Hague Principles; this is because it is more usual for such “rules of law” or “trade usage” to be incorporated by reference, rather than by means of a choice of applicable law.

By comparison, the approach taken in the Mexico Convention is the more conventional one as it provides in Article 9 that, (in those cases where the parties have not selected the applicable law or if their selection proves ineffective such that the court must determine the law of the State with which the contract has the closest connections), “(the Court) shall also take into account the general principles of international commercial law…”. The Mexico Convention also provides in Article 10 that “guidelines (or rules), customs, and principles of international commercial law as well as generally accepted commercial usage and practices” shall be applied in order to discharge the requirements of justice and equity in the resolution of a particular case.

The Hague Principles also include additional innovative provisions. For example, Article 5 provides that a choice of law agreement does not require any particular type of form, unless otherwise agreed by the parties. Article 6 addresses the “battle of the forms” and offers a solution when both parties have made a choice of law by the exchange of competing standard forms.

In summary, as described in the commentary, the Hague Principles may be considered “an international code of current best practice with respect to the recognition of party autonomy in choice of law in international commercial contracts, with certain innovative provisions as appropriate.” Moreover, the Hague Principles represent the latest, most definitive expression of the recognition of this principle in international law and the latest step in the progressive history that has been described above.

V. The Mexico Convention – Contribution to Domestic Legislation

61 Ibid.
As has already been noted, the Mexico Convention has been ratified only by two countries. However, its influence extends beyond the number of ratifications; as was described above, it was among the sources used in the development of the Hague Principles. Secondly, it has also had an important influence on domestic legislation. The following list provides examples of these domestic provisions. Some of these examples were drawn from the response to question one in the questionnaire that was circulated to OAS Member States and that is more fully described in the next part of this paper. That question was as follows: “There is increasing acceptance at the international level of the principle of party autonomy in the choice of applicable law in international commercial contracts. The (Mexico Convention) embraces that principle. Is your domestic law consistent with that principle?”

- Bolivia - in international contracts between private parties, but not in contracts between a private party and the state, in which the applicable law will always be the law of Bolivia;\(^65\)
- Canada - in choice of applicable law in commercial contracts; in Quebec principle is codified in Article 311 of Civil Code and in common law provinces it is recognized in case law;\(^66\)
- Chile - although not expressly stated, domestic legislation does allow party autonomy, however application in international matters will be determined by the courts and doctrinal interpretation;\(^67\)
- Dominican Republic - Law No. 544-14 on Private International Law of October 15, 2014 states that “contracts shall be governed by the law chosen by the parties by means of an express agreement” which leads to the conclusion that it is based on the principle of autonomy of choice.\(^68\)

VI. The Mexico Convention – Reflections on Its Contributions

At the 84th regular session of the Inter-American Juridical Committee held in March 2014, after a presentation by Dr. Ana Elizabeth Villalta Vizcarra on this matter, the topic of “Law Applicable to International Contracts” was included on the agenda. At the instruction of the rapporteur, the legal secretariat circulated a two-part questionnaire to OAS Permanent Missions requesting responses to Part A by OAS Member States and to Part B by academics in those States. As of the date of this paper, the secretariat has received responses from eleven States and responses from thirteen academics. The secretariat has prepared both a complete compilation of those responses and a synopsis; the latter is attached as Appendix A. The following part is derived from responses to that questionnaire.

A. Party Autonomy

When academics were asked whether the Mexico Convention represented a significant step forward in modernizing and harmonizing domestic legal systems in the region, in particular with respect to provisions on conflicts of laws in international contracts, ten academic respondents answered in the affirmative. Some respondents noted that although it has been ratified only by two countries, its provisions are employed by legislators and used as a model when updating domestic legislation in areas of private international law. When asked whether it was beneficial for domestic legislation that the Mexico Convention embraces the principle of party autonomy, ten answered in the affirmative; one added that party autonomy is useful as a “default rule”, another added that this has the effect of encouraging more reluctant states to accept the principle and another considered it beneficial for international trade. It was also noted that whereas Brazilian legislation does not expressly accept party autonomy in choice of law unless arbitration is selected 73 An earlier questionnaire containing 20 questions was circulated in 2014 (see CJI/doc.464/14 rev.1) but only Chile and Paraguay provided a response; the second, shorter questionnaire containing Parts A (States) and B (academics) was circulated in 2015 (see CJI/doc.481/15).

76 Albornoz/González Martín, Berraz, de Araujo, Feldstein, Fresnedo/Operti, Fuentes, Garro, Sotelo, Tiburcio, Winship. An additional response in the affirmative was qualified with the observation that it is not as important today as 25 years ago (Furnish).

as the applicable dispute resolution method, adoption of the Mexico Convention would be helpful in this matter.\textsuperscript{82}

When asked whether the provisions remain up-to-date and important to international contracts, eight academics responded in the affirmative\textsuperscript{83}, one of whom noted that although the provisions are simple, they are useful.\textsuperscript{84} Two of these respondents added that it would be useful to introduce greater clarity in certain aspects.\textsuperscript{85}

When asked whether their domestic law was consistent with the principle of party autonomy, nine States responded in the affirmative\textsuperscript{86} and included references or explanations (described above). Two countries responded in the negative\textsuperscript{87} but with qualifications: in the response from Brazil was noted the exception of choice of law clauses in arbitration agreements and contracts to which the CISG applies as Brazil is party thereto; in the response from Uruguay it was explained that the law applicable to the contract is that of the place of performance, therefore such a principle would only be recognized if allowed by the law of the place of performance (\textit{i.e.}, if performance is in another State).

\textbf{B. The Proximity Principle or Closest Connections Test}

Given that the Mexico Convention provides that, if the parties to a contract do not choose the applicable law (or make an ineffective choice), the applicable law shall be the one with which the contract has the closest connection, States were asked whether their domestic law is consistent with that rule. Seven States answered in the affirmative.\textsuperscript{88} One of these, namely Bolivia, noted in its response that this rule is a provision of private international law under the Bustamante Code, to which Bolivia is party, but that the rule only applies to international contracts between private parties and not to contracts to which the State is party.\textsuperscript{89} The United States of America responded that the applicable law varies from state to state; the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws refers to the state that has “the most significant relationship to the transaction and the parties”.\textsuperscript{90} Two States answered in the negative;\textsuperscript{91} Brazil noted in its response that this was with the exception of choice of law clauses in arbitration agreements and contracts to which the UN CISG applies.\textsuperscript{92}

When States were asked whether reference to general principles of international commercial law (UNIDROIT Principles) and lex mercatoria is important in their domestic legislation, six States answered in the affirmative and five answered in the negative.

VII. The Mexico Convention – Reflections on its Limitations

Although the low rate of ratification alone is not indicative of the achievements of the Mexico Convention, nonetheless, it is worthwhile to examine possible reasons. When the question was put to States and academics, the following responses were received.

A. Language Inconsistencies

Two States and two academics cited inconsistencies between the official texts. Comments noted awkward English and discrepancies between the official texts in English and Spanish. Attached as Appendix B is a compendium that identifies these inconsistencies and possible clarifications.

B. Novel and Controversial Choice of Law Principles

1. Party Autonomy

Two States and three academics cited party autonomy. It was noted that this represents a radical shift from the traditional approach of conflict of laws predominant in civil law countries. It was noted that there are two schools of thought in Brazil: the majority view is that the principle exists despite silence in the Brazilian Code because “fundamental principles cannot disappear by the simple omission of the law”, while another school of thought maintains that party autonomy does not exist in Brazilian law. It was also pointed out that although national laws may be consistent in applying the principle of party autonomy, the law can vary significantly in terms of scope of coverage.

2. The Proximity Principle or Closest Connection Test

Two academics cited the “closest connection” or “proximity principle. Comments noted lack of clear guidelines for judges in determining the law with the closest connection and similarly, that in jurisdictions unfamiliar with this concept, it would be necessary to enhance the skills of the judiciary in balancing factors before determining the applicable law.\textsuperscript{104}

3. General Principles of International Commercial Law

Four academics\textsuperscript{105} cited lack of clarity and scope of the references to general principles or lex mercatoria (Article 10). Comments were made that the language is too broad and scope unclear.

C. Other

Other reasons that were suggested for the low rate of ratification included the following:

- Lack of “reasonable relation” requirement – One academic noted that under U.S. law, if the contract falls within the substantive scope of the U.S. Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) the applicable law chosen by the parties must have a reasonable relation to the transaction and as the Mexico Convention does not have such a requirement, some groups may oppose ratification.\textsuperscript{106}
- Inconsistency with domestic law – One State response noted that the applicable law governing contracts to which the State is a party must be its own domestic law.\textsuperscript{107}
- Absence of domestic legislation for international contracts – One State response cited its own lack of internal domestic legislation in the subject matter.\textsuperscript{108}
- Requirement for stakeholder consultation and/or study – Four State responses cited the need for further consultation or study at the domestic level.\textsuperscript{109} One State (Brazil) response noted that consultation would be required in particular with respect to consumer protection.
- Ignorance of benefits and lack of dissemination – One State response\textsuperscript{110} and three academics\textsuperscript{111} noted lack of awareness about the potential benefits, either at the time of its development or currently. The suggestion was made that there has been insufficient debate in open forums of academic exchange so that it remains unknown in both domestic and international jurisprudence and doctrine.\textsuperscript{112}
- Lack of local champion or political will – Two academics\textsuperscript{113}
- Lack of stakeholder interest - Two State responses indicated absence of expressions of interest for stakeholders.\textsuperscript{114} One (Argentina) noted that even independently of the Mexico Convention, it appears that international instruments dealing with choice of law (such as the Hague Convention) do not raise enough interest to attract the necessary impetus to ensure universality.

• Inertia – One academic considered the Mexico Convention to have been superseded by subsequent events, e.g., that arbitration has, to a large degree, negated the need for a convention on the law applicable to the written contract.

VIII. The Mexico Convention and the Way Forward

These reflections on both the contributions of the Mexico Convention together with its limitations may serve to be helpful in guiding the way forward. At this point in time, the focus should be on determining the most effective actions that will advance the development of international contract law in the Americas. There are several options for consideration.

A. Reform of the Mexico Convention

When academics were asked whether specific amendments to the Mexico Convention are necessary, seven answered in the negative. One responded in the affirmative and suggested that clarification is required on a number of provisions. Another responded that clarification of certain provisions (i.e., lex mercatoria and Articles 9 and 10) may make it more acceptable to more States while another noted the lack of (and need for) provisions for consumer protection.

B. Incorporation into a Model Law

When academics were asked whether it would be useful to include the guiding and informative principles of the Mexico Convention into a model law, seven answered in the affirmative. Two consider that it already serves as such a model and another noted that model laws have generally had success in the Latin American context. It was thought that by incorporating the principles into a model law the exercise could serve as a good opportunity to make corrections but that such an exercise should take into account both the Mexico Convention and the Hague Principles. It was noted that such a drafting exercise could be a way to stimulate renewed interest in the subject and promote further debate however, caution was expressed against the practice of “copy and paste” without thorough scrutiny of international standards.

One suggestion was that as a first step it would be prudent to become informed on which States plan to reform their respective legislation in this area and if they would give effect to such a model law. Another noted that an active policy of the OAS recommending that its Member States consider the implementation of major provisions of the Mexico Convention into their domestic legislation may be equally effective and less costly.

Two academics answered in the negative and recommended instead that the OAS should support adoption of the Hague Principles, noting that it would not be wise to have a different set of principles for the same subject, especially as many Latin American countries are active participants at the Hague Conference. Another view expressed was that given the low rate of ratification of the Mexico Convention, there is no reason to believe a model law would have any other outcome.

C. Clarification

Some academics and States indicated that in order to gain wider acceptance of the Mexico Convention, clarifications would be required. For example, it was suggested that the meaning of lex mercatoria be clarified and whether parties can choose lex mercatoria as their governing law, that greater consistency be adopted in the way the term is referenced (e.g., in Articles 9 and 10) and that the qualifier “principles of lex mercatoria accepted by international organizations” [emphasis added] be clarified.

D. Dissemination

When States were asked whether it would be useful for the OAS to convene a meeting of government and private experts to discuss the Mexico Convention, its provisions and the benefits that could be achieved by widespread ratification and implementation among Member States, nine States responded in the affirmative. Comments included suggestions that such discussion should also include possible amendments to the text (Canada). Two States expressed concerns over lack of available funding to send representation to such meetings. One State responded in the negative, stating that, in general, international instruments dealing with choice of law do not generate enough interest.

When States were asked whether it be useful to disseminate to OAS Member States information about the potential benefits of the Mexico Convention and other Inter-American conventions on private international law that promote cross-border trade in the region, ten States answered in the affirmative. One State response included the suggestion that this be done in conjunction with promotion of other global models on same subject; another response indicated that such information about potential benefits would be useful to inform the internal consultation process so that consideration can be given to signing and ratification of these conventions.

When academics were asked a similar question as to whether it would be useful to embark on an extensive effort to disseminate the Mexico Convention along with other Inter-American conventions on private international law, eleven academics responded in the affirmative.\textsuperscript{139} Some noted that the hard work of dissemination and explanation of potential benefits is, in fact, what is required.\textsuperscript{140} It was also noted that this would be the right time for such an initiative, with the suggestion that if the prevailing trend towards the internalization of the rules of private international law continues, there will be less motivation for States to support harmonization efforts through the implementation of conventions.\textsuperscript{141} Another pointed out that a convention once adopted cannot simply be left alone and that it is crucial to carry out routine post-convention meetings in order to discuss practical issues and recurring problems. As an example the Hague Conference was cited, which carries out such meetings every five years. It was pointed out that these meetings enhance knowledge of the documents and how they are best applied, which helps strengthen international cooperation, especially among central authorities.\textsuperscript{142} Others pointed out that, given the scarcity of OAS resources, such an effort should be selective and rely more on industry and business constituencies and their legal advisors, who will ultimately benefit from the application of these conventions;\textsuperscript{143} it was suggested that any attempt to disseminate OAS texts be coordinated with the work of other international or intergovernmental bodies that have a similar desire to promote trade and investment in the region (\textit{i.e.}, UNCITRAL, UNIDROIT, the Inter-American Development Bank and the World Bank Group).\textsuperscript{144}

Asked whether such efforts might be received more positively, given the progress on arbitration that has been made in recent years and because current conditions have changed since 1994, two States responded in the affirmative, one of which (Chile) suggested this was so both for those States in which there has been evolution in the law on arbitration and those where there has not.\textsuperscript{145}

Asked whether more wide-spread implementation of the Mexico Convention (as well as other Inter-American conventions in private international law) would help improve cross-border trade and strengthen regional integration, eleven academics answered in the affirmative.\textsuperscript{146} One cautioned that the OAS would do well to review which, out of the many Inter-American conventions that have not gained wide acceptance, would be worth resuscitation with a realistic prospect of possible adoption\textsuperscript{147}; another noted that effective implementation would require additional efforts, such as education for financial and commercial enterprises and for professionals.\textsuperscript{148} It was also noted that the same effect can occur without ratification, to the extent that States can adopt the solutions offered by these conventions in their domestic legislation, which, in fact, is what has happened in many cases.\textsuperscript{149}

E. Further Study

In terms of possible future work, the following suggestions were made with a view towards bringing clarity to these issues and thereby achieve greater uniformity:

- Clarify and establish the rules that are to be applied to support the finding of an agreement on choice of law;\(^{150}\)
- Clarify the rules of public policy that should limit the enforceability of choice of law terms agreed to by the parties;\(^{151}\)
- Conduct an analytical study of domestic laws of the region and rules of private international law governing international contracts to confirm which States already adhere to the principle of party autonomy.\(^ {152}\)

IX. Conclusions and Recommendations

This paper has reviewed the progressive history of the development of international contract law and the contributions of the Mexico Convention within that process and towards the development of domestic legislation. In addition, responses received from OAS Member States and academics from within the region have also been taken into consideration. Subsequent reflections have led to the development of the following recommendations which are being presented for discussion and further consideration.

Recommendations:

1. Encourage OAS Member States to consider adhesion to or ratification of the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts (the “Mexico Convention”).

- It has been widely acknowledged and verified once again by the responses received from OAS Member States and academics from the region, that the Mexico Convention has made valuable contributions to the development of the law of contract in the hemisphere. In the twenty years since its adoption, many of its principles, in particular the principle of party autonomy, have gained acceptance throughout the region and become enshrined in the domestic laws of a number of OAS Member States.
- The advantages of the principle of party autonomy are significant and help reduce uncertainty in the international law of contract. In international trade and commerce, the contract is a predominant legal vehicle. Adopting common principles in the international law of contract would help to provide the private sector with a legal framework will provide legal certainty and thereby promote trade and commerce in the region, which will thereby further advance economic integration and development.

\(^{150}\) Winship. Parties may make an explicit agreement on the choice of law or this agreement may be implicit; it would be helpful – for both cases - to outline how the determination of such an agreement may be made.

\(^{151}\) Ibid. Although it is widely acknowledged that choice of law cannot be contrary to public policy, which rules and how such a determination can be made is not as clear.

\(^{152}\) Sotelo
2. Encourage OAS Member States to consider endorsing the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Commercial Contracts ("Hague Principles").

- The Hague Principles are the most recent international instrument in the progressive development of the international law of contract. This soft law instrument is consistent with and builds upon the Mexico Convention.

3. Encourage OAS Member States to consider both the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts and the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Commercial Contracts and to incorporate into their domestic law regimes such of these principles and in such manner as may be appropriate for the circumstances of each State.

- The Mexico Convention and the Hague Principles are complementary to each other and reinforce primary principles in the international law of contract, in particular, the principle of party autonomy. The recently enacted legislation in the field of contract law by Paraguay can be held up as an example of complementarity for consideration by other OAS Member States.

4. Request funding to enable the OAS Secretariat for Legal Affairs to disseminate information about the Mexico Convention and the Hague Principles to OAS Member States to encourage implementation of the above three recommendations.

- Ongoing educational efforts are required to promote awareness about the advantages to be gained through adherence to these international legal instruments.

5. Suggest that the Inter-American Juridical Committee adopt a resolution endorsing the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Commercial Contracts and recommending that OAS Member States consider both the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts and the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Commercial Contracts and to incorporate into their domestic law regimes such of these principles and in such manner as may be appropriate for the circumstances of each State.
APPENDIX A

RESPONSES TO QUESTIONNAIRE ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN CONVENTIONS ON PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW

SYNOPSIS

The following document is a synopsis of the responses received from the Permanent Missions to the OAS. An initial questionnaire containing 20 questions was circulated in 2014 (see CJI/doc.464/14 rev.1) to which the Governments of Chile and Paraguay provided responses; the second, shorter questionnaire containing Parts A (States) and B (Academics) was circulated in 2015 (see CJI/doc.481/15) to which the Governments of the following nine States provided responses: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Jamaica, Mexico, Panama, Uruguay and United States of America. The first questionnaire contained questions similar to those in the shorter, second version and insofar as possible, the responses of Chile and Paraguay have been incorporated into the synopsis below.

The questions contained in the second, shorter questionnaire have been included below; all 20 questions in the first questionnaire can be found in the aforementioned document (see CJI/doc.464/14 rev.1). The full responses to both questionnaires virtually in their entirety may be found in the reports by the rapporteur for the topic, Law Applicable to International Contracts (see CJI/doc.487/15 rev.1).

PART A. STATES

QUESTION 1

There is increasing acceptance at the international level of the principle of party autonomy in the choice of applicable law in international commercial contracts. The 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts (known as the Mexico City Convention) embraces that principle. Is your domestic law consistent with that principle?

Countries that responded “yes” – Argentina (expressly stated in Article 2651 of the new Civil and Commercial Code in force August 1, 2015); Canada (in choice of applicable law in commercial contracts; in Quebec principle is codified in Article 311 of Civil Code and in common law provinces it is recognized in case law); Jamaica (by common law); Mexico (as party to Convention and as recognized in its domestic law; Panama (as long as it does not contravene the law and public interest); Bolivia (in international contracts between private parties, but not in contracts between a private party and the state, in which the applicable law will always be the law of Bolivia); Chile (although not expressly stated, domestic legislation does allow party autonomy, however application in international matters will be determined by the courts and doctrinal interpretation); USA (but party autonomy is not applied as broadly as in the Mexico Convention. Conflict of laws in the United States is largely state law, with the result that each of the 50 states has its own doctrines; most of the states are substantially similar in their approaches but are not identical). Although Paraguay did not indicate yes or no, an affirmative can be inferred from a fulsome response to the questionnaire.

Countries that responded “no” – Brazil (with the exception of choice of law clauses in arbitration agreements and contracts to which the CISG applies, to which Brazil is party); Uruguay (the law applicable to the contract is that of the place of performance, therefore such a principle would only be recognized if allowed by the law of the place of performance - i.e., if performance is in another country).

QUESTION 2

The Convention also provides that, if the parties to a contract do not choose the applicable law (or make an ineffective choice), the applicable law shall be the one with which the contract has the closest ties. Is your domestic law consistent with that rule?

Countries that responded “yes” – Argentina, Canada, Jamaica, Mexico, Panama; Bolivia (this provision is a provision of private international law established in the Bustamante Code to which Bolivia is party, but it only applies to international contracts between private parties and not to contracts to which the state is party); Paraguay (however, the Paraguayan law does not include the last part of paragraph 2 of Article 9 of the Mexico Convention, that “the general principles of international commercial law recognized by international organizations” shall be taken into account); USA did not state “yes” or “no” but that (the applicable law varies from state to state. The Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws refers to the state that has “the most significant relationship to the transaction and the parties”).

Countries that responded “no” – Brazil (with the exception of choice of law clauses in arbitration agreements and contracts to which the CISG applies, to which Brazil is party); Uruguay (the law applicable to the contract is that of the place of performance); Chile (that would require a new rule; if a contract is to be performed in Chile, regardless where it was executed, it will be subject to the law of Chile).

QUESTION 3

A novel aspect of the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts is that it takes into account the general principles of international commercial law (UNIDROIT principles), as well as lex mercatoria. Are references to them important for your country's legislation?

Countries that responded “yes” – Jamaica (general principles of lex mercatoria that form part of the common law are reflected in Carriage of Goods Act); Panama (legislation and jurisprudence refers to both – and the specific provisions are provided); Paraguay (however, it is a new tendency in legislation); Uruguay (accepts the UNIDROIT principles, having signed and ratified conventions such as the CISG); Mexico (it is important to take into account and apply the UNIDROIT Principles, lex mercatoria, as well as the Hague Principles on international contracts); USA did not state “yes” or “no” but that (international commercial practices are very important in the US – examples given are UCC ss 1-302 which allows parties to incorporate international standards (such as UNIDROIT principles or trade codes) and ss 1-303 that contracts be interpreted in light of inter alia, “usages of trade”).

Countries that responded “no” – Canada (legislation does not refer to either); Bolivia (does not have any legislation that makes explicit reference to either, but if parties agree to use the principles, then the law will respect that choice); Brazil (refers to previous answers which explain that with the exceptions of arbitration and CISG, Brazilian law does not permit party autonomy); Argentina (not influential enough to became universal principles); Chile (gives the court that is to determine the applicable law more tools with which to identify basic uniform elements of the contract).

QUESTION 4
If your country has not yet signed or ratified the Mexico City Convention, what specific issues or problems prevent that from occurring? Are there any amendments to the convention needed to resolve those issues or problems?

Language discrepancies and issues related to grammar and syntax - (Canada - included a comparative table of three linguistic versions); lack of concordance between English and Spanish translations – (USA)

Inconsistency with domestic law – (Bolivia - the applicable law governing contracts to which the state is a party is Bolivian law); (USA – range of party autonomy in Mexico Convention is broader than in US law)

Stakeholders in business and legal communities have not expressed strong interest – (Canada)

No specific domestic legislation dealing with international contracts – (Jamaica)

Independently of the Mexico Convention, international instruments dealing with choice of law do not raise enough interest to attract the necessary ratifications to ensure universality – (Argentina)

Stakeholder consultations and/or analysis & studies are required at domestic level – (Chile, Jamaica, Panama, Brazil - especially with special attention to consumer protection).

Signed the convention and its ratification is still in process – (Uruguay)

Misinformation or lack of information at that time – (Paraguay)

States of the Americas should be encouraged to ratify the Mexico Convention and incorporate its provisions through the adoption of domestic legislation that reflects its spirit, as was done by the enactment of Law 5393/15 – (Paraguay)

QUESTION 5

Would it be useful for the OAS to convene a meeting of government and private experts to discuss the Convention, its provisions and the benefits which would be achieved by widespread ratification and implementation among OAS Member States? Would your government send a representative?

Countries that responded “yes” – Chile, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Uruguay, USA, Canada (and to include discussion on possible amendments to the text); Jamaica (but suggests information be shared in written form, due to lack of funds to send representative); Brazil (but representation depends on available budget).

Countries that responded “no” – Argentina (international instruments dealing with choice of law do not raise enough interest to attract the necessary ratifications to ensure universality); Bolivia (relevance of such a meeting and our participation would be determined by Ministry of Foreign Affairs)

QUESTION 6

Would it be useful to disseminate the potential benefits to OAS member states of the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts and of other Inter-American conventions on private international law that promote cross-border trade in the region and regional integration process, so that the OAS member states can take advantage of and benefit from the novel solutions put forward in those conventions?
Countries that responded “yes” – Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Panama, Paraguay, Uruguay, USA; Canada (in conjunction with promotion of other global models on same subject); Jamaica (information on potential benefits would be useful to inform the internal consultation process to consideration can be given to signing and ratification of these conventions); Mexico (not only useful but necessary).

PART B. ACADEMICS

Responses from the following academics were received from the corresponding Permanent Missions to the OAS.

María Mercedes Albornoz / Nuria González Martín (Mexico) (joint response)

Diego Fernández Arroyo (Argentina)

Nadia de Araujo (Brazil)

Carlos Berraz (Argentina)

Sara Feldstein de Cárdenas (Argentina)

Cecilia Fresnedo (Uruguay)/ Didier Opertti Badán (Uruguay) (joint response)

José Marín Fuentes (Colombia)

Dale Furnish (United States of America)

Alejandro Garro (Argentina)

Aníbal Mauricio (Dominican Republic)

Sara Sotelo (Peru)

Carmen Tiburcio (Brazil)

Peter Winship (United States of America)

QUESTION 1

Why has the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts (“the Mexico City Convention”) not (yet) been widely accepted (ratified) by OAS Member States? What problems (if any) prevent ratification by your own government?

1) language inconsistencies (Garro – awkward English; Winship - discrepancies between the English-language and Spanish-language final texts).

2) Novel and controversial choice of law principles

a) party autonomy (Garro, Fresnedo/Opertti - represents a radical shift from the traditional approach of conflict of laws predominant in the civil law countries; Tiburcio – two schools of thought in Brazil – the majority view is that the principle exists despite silence in the Brazilian Code because “fundamental principles cannot disappear by the simple omission of the law”, while another school of thought maintains that party autonomy does not exist in Brazilian law

b) “closest-ties” default rule (Garro – jurisdictions unfamiliar with concept may need to enhance judges’ skills in balancing factors before determining the applicable law; Albornoz/González Martín - lack of clear guidelines that a judge must follow to determine the law with the closest connection)

c) lack of “reasonable relation” requirement (Winship – the applicable law chosen by the parties must have a reasonable relation to the transaction if the contract falls within the substantive scope of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC). Mexico Convention does not have such a requirement; thus, some groups may oppose ratification)

3) Lack of clarity and scope of lex mercatoria (Article 10) – (Albornoz/González Martín, Fernández Arroyo, Fresnedo/Opertti, Winship - language too broad and scope unclear)

4) Ignorance of its benefits, lack of dissemination – (Berraz, Mauricio, Sotelo, Feldstein - insufficient debate in open forums of academic exchange, unknown in the domestic and international jurisprudence and doctrine)

5) Lack of local champion (Fuentes); bureaucracy (Berraz)

6) Inertia (Furnish)

7) Superseded by other events - e.g. Arbitration has, to a large degree, negated the need for a convention on the law applicable to the written contract (Furnish)

QUESTION 2

Are any specific amendments needed to make the Convention acceptable?

No (Berraz, Furnish, Garro, Mauricio, Tiburcio, Winship – if any further work is to be done, would urge soft law – Model Law or statement of principles; Feldstein - the convention was very advanced for its time and remains up to date)

Clarification (lex mercatoria and Articles 9 and 10) may make it more acceptable to more states (Albornoz/González Martín)

Lack of provisions for consumer protection (de Araujo)

Yes (Fresnedo/Opertti – clarification on the cases of which applicable law, and, in absence of a choice of law clause, the “closest connections” of the contract and clear guidelines for judges to make this determination - gives several examples of areas that need clarification)

QUESTION 3

There is growing international acceptance of the Principle of Party Autonomy in choice of law applicable to international contracts. The Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts or Mexico City Convention of 1994 embraces that principle. Is that beneficial for the states’ legislation?

Yes (Fernández Arroyo, Fuentes, Furnish, Garro, Mauricio, Sotelo, Tiburcio; de Araujo – Brazilian legislation does not expressly accept party autonomy in choice of law unless arbitration is selected for dispute settlement and adoption of Mexico Convention would be helpful in this matter; Winship – party autonomy is useful as a default rule and if further work is to be undertaken, would urge attention to defining when there is an enforceable agreement on the applicable law (i.e., what rules apply to support the finding agreement on choice of law) and what rules of public policy should limit the enforceability of choice-of-law terms agreed to by the parties; Albornoz/González Martín - has the effect of “pushing” the more reluctant states to accept the principle, a principle that enjoys almost universal acceptance; Feldstein – provides certainty for business persons (in that potential dispute resolution is addressed in advance); Fresnedo/Opertti – party autonomy is a possible formula for a solution to a conflict of laws, however it isn’t a principle, because otherwise, it wouldn’t need to be expressly stated in the law, nonetheless, the Mexico Convention proposes a solution of positive law that over time can perhaps merit a new convention or protocol;  Berraz- it overcomes the problem of generality created by the legislator, enabling issues specific to the business to be addressed more precisely)

QUESTION 4

Do you agree that the Convention represents a significant step forward in modernizing and harmonizing domestic legal systems with the OAS, in particular with respect to their provisions on conflicts of laws in international contracts?

Yes (Albornoz/González Martín, Berraz, de Araujo, Feldstein, Fuentes, Garro, Sotelo, Tiburcio, Winship)

Yes, and although ratified only by 2 countries, its provisions are employed by legislators and used as a model when updating domestic legislation in matters of PIL (Feldstein, Mauricio)

Maybe still today, but not as important as 25 years ago (Furnish)

No – (Fernández Arroyo - because of the low rate of ratification; however, it has been used as a tool for some legislators in Latin America; Fresnedo/Opertti - it hasn’t provided technical solutions to most of the questions and concerns)

QUESTION 5

Venezuela’s 1988 Law on Private International Law based some of its provisions on the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts. The principles of the Convention are also reflected in the Republic of Panama’s Law of May 8, 2014, the Dominican Republic’s Law No. 544-14 (October 15, 2014) and Republic of Paraguay’s Law No. 5,393 (January 15, 2015). Do you agree that the spirit of the Convention’s provisions remain up-to-date and of importance to contemporary international contracting?

Yes (de Araujo, Feldstein, Garro, Mauricio, Tiburcio; Fuentes – even though the provisions are simple, they are useful)

National laws are consistent in applying principle of party autonomy, but vary significantly in terms of scope of coverage (Winship)

Yes, in general, but it would be useful to introduce greater clarity in certain aspects (Albornoz/ González Martín, Fresnedo/Opertti)
OAS should conduct an analytical study of domestic laws of the region and rules of private int law governing international contracts to confirm which have already included the principles of party autonomy (Sotelo)

Doesn’t have the immediacy it had 25 years ago (Furnish)

Concerns that the expansion of the internalization of PIL rules conflicts with the international unification process (Mauricio)

Since its inception, the convention has had multiple technical errors in the meaning of certain terms; however, the necessary amendments can be made with the hope of solving these problems (Fresnedo/Opertti)

QUESTION 6

It has been said that one of the principal sources of the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Contracts was the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts. Do you agree with that statement?

Yes (Albornoz/González Martín, Fernández Arroyo, Berraz, Feldstein, Garro, Fresnedo/Opertti, Furnish, Mauricio; Fuentes – among others such as the UNIDROIT Principles and the European Principles of Contracts, Canada – it was among the sources used)

QUESTION 7

Would it be useful to include the guiding and informative principles of the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts in a model law (framework law) so that member states can use it when preparing draft domestic legislation?

Yes (Sotelo, Tiburcio; Winship – see answer to question 3; Fuentes, Garro - especially if the drafting exercise is able to stir renewed interest in the subject and to promote further debate about alternative ways to harmonize criteria on this topic; Fernández Arroyo – especially as it is difficult to change a convention; Albornoz/González Martín – opportunity to improve and adjust)

If so, take into account both the Convention and the Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Contracts (Canada)

An active policy of the OAS recommending to its member states to consider the implementation of major provisions of the Convention into their domestic legislation may be equally effective and less costly (Fernández Arroyo)

Already serves as a model (Albornoz/González Martín, Feldstein)

Cautions against the practice of “copy and paste” without thorough scrutiny of international standards (Mauricio)

153 The Government of Canada also responded to some of the questions in Part B.
No (de Araujo – OAS should support adoption of the Hague Principles; unwise to have a different set of principles for the same subject, especially as the Latin American countries are active participants in the Hague Conference)

No (Fresnedo/Opertti – the preparation of domestic laws is an attribute of every state, however, developing a Model Law out of the Mexico Convention to be used by states as a model or point of reference for their domestic international private laws would be recommended. Given that the convention itself has failed in its ratification process, there is no reason to believe a model law would have any other outcome.)

QUESTION 8

Do you agree with the idea that a broad interpretation of the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts, as well as other Inter-American Conventions on Private International Law, would help improve cross-border trade in the region and strengthen regional integration processes?

Yes (Albornoz/González Martín, Fernández Arroyo, Feldstein, Fuentes, Furnish, Mauricio, Sotelo, Tiburcio); Garro - but OAS would do well to review which, out of the many Inter-American Conventions that have failed to gain wide acceptance, are worth being resuscitated with a realistic prospect of possible adoption; Winship – however, effective implementation will require additional efforts, such as education for financial and commercial enterprises and professionals; Fresnedo/Opertti - as long as this isn’t applied exclusively to the Mexico Convention, but to others as well.

QUESTION 9

Forty years after the first Inter-American specialized conferences on private international law in Panama, would it be useful to embark on an extensive effort to disseminate the Inter-American Convention on the Law Applicable to International Contracts, along with other inter-American conventions adopted in connection with the CIDIPs, so that the OAS member states can take advantage of and benefit from the novel solutions put forward in those conventions?

Yes (Albornoz/González Martín, Fernández Arroyo, Berraz, de Araujo, Feldstein, Fuentes, Furnish, Mauricio, Sotelo, Tiburcio, Winship); Fresnedo/Opertti - it should be used to strengthen such conventions, many of which are unknown or considered unworthy.

Crucial to carry out routine post-convention meetings in order to discuss practical issues and recurring problems. The Hague Conference, for example, carries out these meetings every 5 years. These meetings enhance the knowledge of the documents and how they are best applied, helping to strengthen the international cooperation, especially among central authorities (de Araujo)

Bear in mind limited resources & coordinate efforts with other int’l orgs (Garro, Winship)

CONVENCIÓN INTERAMERICANA
SOBRE DERECHO APLICABLE A LOS CONTRATOS INTERNACIONALES
La reconciliación entre los Textos Español, Inglés y Francés

(PARTE A - Inglés)

COMMENTARY:
Legibility – Level 1: Recommended reading in order to clarify meaning and/or for improved consistency between the texts.
Legibility – Level 2: Although not required, suggested reading for clarification.
Differences in Meaning: In three instances the meaning is clear but different as between the language versions, or unclear in more than one language.
Note: Minor differences in language that do not hamper understanding have not been highlighted. Annotations have not been provided. It was thought these suggested readings could be helpful to promote the use of the texts to further advance the development of the law applicable to international contracts in the Americas.

COMENTARIO:
Legibilidad - Nivel 1: Se recomienda la lectura para aclarar el significado y/o mejor la consistencia entre los textos.
Legibilidad - Nivel 2: Aunque no es necesario, lectura sugerida para aclaración.
Diferencias en Significado: En los tres casos el significado es claro, pero hay diferencias entre las versiones lingüísticas, o poco clara en más de un idioma.
Nota: Las pequeñas diferencias de lenguaje que no dificulten la comprensión no se han puesto de relieve. No se han proporcionado anotaciones. Se pensaba estas lecturas sugeridas podrían ser útiles para promover el uso de los textos para seguir avanzando en el desarrollo del derecho aplicable a los contratos internacionales en las Américas.

INTER-AMERICAN CONVENTION ON THE LAW APPLICABLE TO INTERNATIONAL CONTRACTS

Reconciliation between the Spanish, English and French Texts

(PART B – French)

CONVENCIÓN INTERAMERICANA
SOBRE DERECHO APLICABLE A LOS CONTRATOS INTERNACIONALES
La reconciliación entre los Textos Español, Inglés y Francés

(PARTE B - Francés)

COMMENTARY:
Legibility – Level 1: Recommended reading in order to clarify meaning and/or for great consistency between texts.
Legibility – Level 2: Although not required, suggested reading for clarification.
Differences in Meaning: In three instances the meaning is clear but different as between the language versions, or unclear in both (more than one language).
Minor differences in language that do not hamper understanding have not been highlighted. Annotations have not been provided. It was thought these suggested readings could be helpful to promote the use of the texts to further advance the development of international contract law in the Americas.

COMENTARIO:
Legibilidad – Nivel 1: Se recomienda la lectura para aclarar el significado y/o mejor la consistencia entre los textos.
Legibilidad - Nivel 2: Aunque no es necesario, lectura sugerida para aclaración.
Diferencias en Significado: En los tres casos el significado es claro, pero hay diferencias entre las versiones lingüísticas, o poco clara en más de un idioma.
Nota: Las pequeñas diferencias de lenguaje que no dificulten la comprensión no se han puesto de relieve. No se han proporcionado anotaciones. Se pensaba estas lecturas sugeridas podrían ser útiles para promover el uso de los textos para seguir avanzando en el desarrollo del derecho aplicable a los contratos internacionales en las Américas.
CONVENCIÓN INTERAMERICANA SOBRE DERECHO APLICABLE A LOS CONTRATOS INTERNACIONALES

Suscrita en México, D.F., México el 17 de marzo de 1994, en la Quinta Conferencia Especializada Interamericana sobre Derecho Internacional Privado (CIDIP-V)

Los Estados Partes de esta Convención,

REAFIRMANDO su voluntad de continuar el desarrollo progresivo y la codificación del derecho internacional privado entre Estados miembros de la Organización de los Estados Americanos;

REITERANDO la conveniencia de armonizar las soluciones de las cuestiones relativas al comercio internacional;

CONSIDERANDO que la interdependencia económica de los Estados ha propiciado la integración regional y continental, y que para estimular este proceso es necesario facilitar la contratación internacional removiendo las diferencias que presenta su marco jurídico,

HAN CONVENIDO aprobar la siguiente Convención:

CAPITULO PRIMERO
Ámbito de aplicación

Artículo 1
Esta Convención determina el derecho aplicable a los contratos internacionales.

Se entenderá que un contrato es internacional si las partes del mismo tienen su residencia habitual o su establecimiento en Estados Partes diferentes, o si el contrato tiene contactos objetivos con más de un Estado Parte.
