

Chance Coughenour
Program Manager, Google Cultural Institute

Chance coordinates heritage preservation efforts on a global scale as a program manager at the Google Cultural Institute. He organizes partnerships and manages projects which utilize emerging technology for cultural heritage preservation. Prior to Google, Chance was an archaeologist and Marie Curie researcher at the University of Stuttgart in Germany. He has worked and directed projects throughout Europe and the Americas.

Chance earned his master's degree in archaeology and heritage from the University of Leicester in the UK.