The Organization of American States (OAS) celebrated today the beginning of the International Year for People of African Descent at a special session of the Permanent Council where the Organization reaffirmed its commitment towards the full participation of Afro-descendants under conditions of equality in all aspects of political, economic, social and cultural life in their countries. "I hope that this year marks the beginning of a wider and stronger commitment towards the Americas' millions of people of African descent. They have lived too long under conditions of discrimination, exclusion,...
