U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

The White House, April 13, 1988.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the Treaty between the United States of America and the Commonwealth of The Bahamas on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, signed at Nassau on June 12 and August 18, 1987, with related notes. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State with respect to the Treaty.

The Treaty is one of a series of modern mutual legal assistance treaties being negotiated by the United States in order to counter criminal activities more effectively. The Treaty should be an effective tool in prosecuting a wide variety of modern criminals, including members of drug cartels, and "white-collar criminals." The Treaty is self-executing and utilizes existing statutory authority.

The Treaty provides for a broad range of cooperation in criminal matters. Mutual assistance available under the Treaty includes: (1) taking testimony or statements of witnesses; (2) provision of documents, records, and evidence; (3) execution of requests for searches and seizures; (4) transfer of persons in custody for testimonial purposes; (5) serving documents; (6) locating persons; (7) exchanging information; (8) immobilizing forfeitable assets; and (9) any other matter mutually agreed upon.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Treaty, with related notes, and give its advice and consent to ratification.

RONALD REAGAN.

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, March 23, 1988.

The PRESIDENT.

I have the honor to submit to you the Treaty between the United States of America and the Commonwealth of the Bahamas on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters (the "Treaty"), signed at Nassau on June 12 and August 18, 1987, with related notes. I recommend that the Treaty be transmitted to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

The Treaty covers mutual legal assistance in criminal matters. In recent years, similar bilateral treaties have entered into force with Italy, the Netherlands, Switzerland and Turkey; others have been concluded with Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Mexico, Morocco, Thailand, and the United Kingdom on behalf of the Cayman Islands, but have not yet entered into force. The Treaty contains many provisions similar to those in the other treaties as well as some innovations.

The Treaty will not require implementing legislation and will utilize the existing authority of the Federal courts, particularly 28 U.S.C. 1782.

Article 1 provides for assistance in all matters involving "the investigation, prosecution and suppression" of criminal offenses and in "proceedings connected therewith." The Treaty thereby permits mutual assistance at the investigative stage, at grand jury proceedings, and after formal charges have been filed. It also provides for assistance in civil and administrative proceedings relating to narcotics trafficking. Under the Treaty, the Parties may obtain assistance from each other in taking testimony and statements, in obtaining documents, records and evidence, in executing requests for searches and seizures, and in other matters mutually agreed upon. The Treaty provides solely for government-to-government mutual assistance, and thus is not intended to create rights in private parties.

Article 2 defines the "offences" and "proceedings" that can be the basis of a legal assistance request. The first paragraph describes an "offence" as any conduct punishable as a crime under the laws of both the United States and The Bahamas. An "offence" also includes conduct punishable by at least one year under the laws of the State requesting assistance, if that conduct amounts to illegal narcotics-related activities, theft, obtaining money or property by false pretenses, embezzlement, a crime of violence, fraud, or a violation of a law relating to currency or other financial transactions as an integral element of any of the foregoing offenses.

The second paragraph of Article 2 excludes from covered offenses matters that relate to the regulation of taxes, including the imposition, calculation, and collection of taxes, except any matter pertaining to money derived from offenses defined in the first paragraph.

The third paragraph defines the "proceedings" for which the Parties can request legal assistance. "Proceedings" are defined to include criminal trials in either country, as well as U.S grand jury proceedings and Bahamian preliminary inquiries and commissions of inquiry. In addition, the Treaty can be applied to hearings involving the forfeiture of the fruits or instrumentalities of narcotics trafficking. Finally, the Treaty gives the Parties discretion to give assistance in civil hearings, criminal hearings, or administrative adjudicatory proceedings that could result in punishment, restitution to victims of an offense, or a fine imposed as a criminal sentence.

Article 3 permits the Parties to deny assistance under the Treaty in certain limited circumstances. The first paragraph of this article provides that a Party may decline to execute a request if it would prejudice its "security" or "essential public interests," as determined by its Central Authority. The Parties understand that the term "public interests" is to be interpreted narrowly and does not convert the Treaty's mandatory provisions into discretionary ones.

A Party may also deny a request if it relates to a political offense or a purely military offense, if it will be used for trial of a person on a charge for which that person has been previously tried in the Requesting State, or if the request is in support of a prosecution based on a person's race, religion, nationality, or political opinions. In addition, a Party may deny a request if the request does not establish reasonable grounds to believe that the offense has been committed or if it does not establish that the information sought relates to the offense and is located within the Requesting State. The term "reasonable grounds" does not mean the equivalent of a prima facie case or "probable cause," but rather a precise, rational explanation for the Requesting State's belief that a crime has been committed within its territory. Finally, this paragraph provides that a Party may turn down a request that does not conform to the terms of the Treaty.

The second paragraph of Article 3 provides that the Requested State may impose conditions on its assistance in lieu of denying a request outright pursuant to the first paragraph. The third paragraph states that a request for assistance need not be executed immediately where execution would interfere with an investigation or legal proceeding in progress in the Requested State. The final paragraph requires the Central Authority of the Requested State promptly to notify the Central Authority of the Requesting State of the reason for denying or postponing a request.

Article 4 requires each Party to establish a Central Authority responsible for transmitting, receiving and handling requests under the Treaty on behalf of Federal and State agencies, courts and other authorities in that State. The Central Authorities are, respectively, the Attorney General of the United States or his designee and the Attorney General of The Bahamas or his designee.

Article 5 provides that a request must be in writing if compulsory process—judicial subpoena, search warrants, and the like—is necessary, or if the Requested State requires a written request. In an emergency, an oral request can be made, but it must be confirmed in writing "forthwith."

The second paragraph of Article 5 lists information that is crucial to efficient operation of the agreement and therefore must be included in each request. The third paragraph outlines information that should be provided "to the extent necessary and possible." There is no requirement under the Treaty that a request be legalized or certified in any particular manner.

Article 6 obligates each Central Authority to make all diligent efforts to execute requests promptly and to use all legal means within its power to execute a request. The article authorizes and requires the authority selected by the Central Authority to take whatever action necessary and within its power to carry out a request. If execution of the request entails action by a judicial or administrative agency, the Central Authority of the Requested State is required to arrange for presentation of the request to the court or agency at no cost to the other Party. Since the cost of retaining foreign counsel to present and process letters rogatory requests abroad is sometimes quite high, this provision for reciprocal legal representation should be a significant advance in international legal cooperation. Of course, a Party is free to hire private counsel to present a request for legal assistance.

The first paragraph of Article 7 provides that the Requesting State shall assume all ordinary expenses required to present evidence from the Requested State in the Requesting State. The second paragraph provides that the Requested State is required to pay all ordinary costs incurred in executing the request, such as filing fees, but is not responsible for the lawful fees of expert witnesses, the travel and incidental expenses of witnesses travelling to that State, translation and transcription expenses, costs involved in transporting requested documents to the Requesting State, or stenographic reports not prepared by a salaried government employee. The article also provides for consultation when expenses of an extraordinary nature are required to execute a request.

Article 7 also addresses a recurring problem in this area: the cost of legal representation of witnesses. The Parties have agreed that it would be unfair to call upon the Requesting State routinely to pay the legal expenses of witnesses responding to the Requested State's compulsory process issued pursuant to the Treaty. Accordingly, the Treaty provides that a witness appearing in the territory of the Requesting State is entitled only to the same witness fees ordinarily paid by the Requesting State, and that a witness appearing in the Requested State is entitled to fees as agreed between the Central Authorities.

Article 8 restricts the use of any information or evidence obtained under the Treaty to investigations, prosecutions, or suppression of criminal offenses stated in the request, absent prior consent of the Requested Party to other uses. Such other uses include inquiries, examinations, audits, efforts to identify targets, or use in any prosecutions or proceedings other than that for which assistance was granted. This article provides that all information or evidence furnished under the Treaty shall be treated as confidential except when disclosure is necessary for purposes of investigations or proceedings forming part of the prosecution of an offense described in the request. The Treaty also imposes certain restrictions on additional uses of such information or evidence even after it has been made public in a proceeding forming part of a prosecution.

Article 9 provides that if compulsory process is necessary, the Requested State may compel the taking of testimony or production of documents for the Requesting State by means available under the Requested State's laws.

Article 10 authorizes the transfer of a person in custody in either State to the other for purposes of providing testimony, subject to the consent of the person and the relevant Party or Parties. Authority is also provided to keep such a person in custody unless release is authorized by the sending State. The receiving State is required to send the person back as soon as circumstances permit and is not permitted to condition the person's return on an extradition request by the sending State.

Article 11 provides that the Requested State shall invite, but not compel, witnesses located in its territory to appear in the Requesting State. The Requesting State is required to pay the expenses of such voluntary appearance in accordance with Article 7(5).

Article 12 ensures "safe conduct" for a witness who voluntarily appears in the Requesting State pursuant to Article 11. "Safe conduct" encompasses immunity from prosecution, service of civil process, detention or any restriction of personal liberty with regard to acts or convictions that preceded the witness' departure from the Requested State while the witness is present in the Requesting State and for up to ten days after presence in the Requesting State is no longer required.

Article 13 provides that the Requested State shall provide copies of its publicly available government records if such records are requested under the Treaty. In addition, the Requested State may, in its discretion, provide any record or information not publicly available to the same extent that such records or information would be made available to its own law enforcement and judicial authorities.

Article 14 stipulates that a Party may notify the other of fruits or instrumentalities of a criminal offense believed to be in the territory of the other Party, in order that the Parties shall, to the extent permitted by their law, assist each other in proceedings regarding forfeiture, restitution, or the collection of fines. "Fruits and instrumentalities" include money, vessels and other property used in perpetrating the crime or acquired as a result of the crime.

The provision for assistance in forfeiture proceedings, expressly authorizes assistance in the execution of their penal laws, an area in which countries do not necessarily otherwise assist each other. It is also consistent with a recently enacted U.S. statute that permits equitable sharing of forfeited property with a foreign government in order to reflect that government's contribution in narcotics investigations leading to seizure or forfeiture.

Article 15 provides that a request involving the search, seizure and delivery of an article shall be carried out if the Requesting State provides sufficient evidence for such action under the laws of the Requested State. In the United States, a Bahamian request would have to be supported by showing that probable cause for the search exists, and in The Bahamas a request by the United States would have to demonstrate compliance with the corresponding Bahamian evidentiary standard. This article also establishes procedures for certification of the chain of custody and condition of a seized article, and it enables the Requested State to stipulate terms and conditions for the transfer of the item in order to protect third party interests.

Article 16 requires the Requested State to make its "best efforts" to locate or identify witnesses, potential defendants, experts, and other persons who are believed to be in its territory and are needed in connection with the investigation, prosecution or suppression of an offense in the Requesting State.

Article 17 obligates the Requested State to arrange for the service of a summons, complaint or other legal document relating to a request for assistance, but leaves it to that State's discretion to serve a subpoena or other process requiring the attendance of a person before any authority or tribunal in the Requesting State. The Requesting State must transmit a document inviting the person to appear in the Requesting State at least thirty days in advance.

Article 18 provides that the Treaty does not preclude either Party from utilizing other international agreements or arrangements, such as Interpol, that may offer means of securing assistance or cooperation.

Article 19 provides that the Parties will consult as appropriate to develop other arrangements on mutual assistance.

Article 20 sets forth standard procedures for ratification and entry into force of the Treaty.

Article 21 provides that either Party may terminate the Treaty by written notice. Termination takes effect six months after such notification.

The exchange of diplomatic notes accompanying the Treaty appends the three legal forms mentioned in Article 9(5), Article 13(3) and Article 15(2) of the Treaty.

The United States Delegation, consisting of representatives of the Departments of Justice and State, has also prepared a Technical Section-by-Section Analysis of the Treaty. That Analysis will be transmitted separately to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Department of Justice joins the Department of State in favoring approval of this Treaty by the Senate at an early date.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE P. SHULTZ.

1. If the Central Authority of one State becomes aware of fruits or instrumentalities of offences located in the other State which may be forfeitable or otherwise subject to seizure under the laws of that State related to serious offences such as narcotics trafficking, it may so inform the Central Authority of the other State. If that other State has jurisdiction in this regard, it shall present this information to its authorities for a determination whether any action is appropriate. These authorities shall issue their decision in accordance with the laws of their country, and shall, through their Central Authority, report to the other State on the action taken.

2. The Contracting States shall assist each other to the extent permitted by their respective laws and this Treaty in proceedings relating to the forfeiture of the fruits or instrumentalities of offences, restitution to the victims of crime, and the collection of fines imposed as sentences in criminal prosecutions.

No further certification shall be required. The certificates shall be admissible in evidence in the Requesting State as proof of the truth of the matters set forth therein.

3. The Requested State shall not be obliged to provide any item seized to the Requesting State unless that State has agreed to such terms and conditions as may be required by the Requested State to protect third party interests in the item to be transferred.

ARTICLE 16

ARTICLE 17

SERVING DOCUMENTS

The Requested State shall effect service of any document relating to or forming part of any request for assistance properly made under the provisions of this Treaty transmitted to it for this purpose by the Requesting State; provided that the Requested State shall not be obliged to serve any subpoena or other process requiring the attendance of any person before any authority or tribunal in the Requesting State.
2. Unless otherwise agreed, any request for the service of a document inviting the appearance of a person before an authority in the Requesting State shall be transmitted at least thirty days prior to the date of the scheduled appearance.
3. The Requested State shall return as proof of service a receipt signed by the person served or a declaration signed by the officer making service, specifying the form and date of service.

ARTICLE 18

COMPATIBILITY WITH OTHER TREATIES AND INTERNAL LAWS

ARTICLE 19

IMPROVEMENT OF ASSISTANCE

1. The Parties agree to consult as appropriate to develop other specific agreements or arrangements, formal or informal, on mutual legal assistance.
2. The Parties may agree on such practical measures as may be necessary to facilitate the implementation of this Treaty.
