Two years ago, on November 18th, 2019, the Inter-American Commission of Women (CIM) of the Organization of American States in partnership with the Organization of Women of the Americas began a timely and critical dialogue among women ambassadors of the Inter-American System. This seminal event highlighted the key role that women leaders play at the diplomatic level in addressing multilateral concerns such as: Socio-economic inequalities, threats to citizen security, economic insecurity, environmental degradation and disasters, and global pandemics – to name a few. It also explored whether there were tangible gender-related differences in the approaches of women ambassadors to negotiating positions on matters of foreign policy. As our women diplomats exposed the enormous pressures that they face in handling these major challenges, the roundtable underscored the importance of transformational and inclusive leadership that is necessary to navigate these uncertain and unprecedented times.

Two years later, the high-level conversation continues with a view to empowering women and promoting gender equality by looking at how foreign policy has been shaped to reflect gender considerations. This dialogue is contextualized by a geopolitical climate which has become even more challenging – and exponentially shifting and changing. In our overburdened hemisphere, our countries continue to grapple with multiplying epidemiological, environmental, and economic threats; a mushrooming multidimensional insecurity among citizens; and slowly eroding democratic rights and freedoms in some countries. Our global vulnerability is the common denominator as countries face our utter interdependence as the actions of each world leader has implications for our very survival.

The Inter-American Commission of Women will continue to host these high-level dialogues to increase our footprint for more gender-equitable national, regional, and multilateral spaces. Through these conversations, we hope to chart and assess the progress made as a hemisphere; and make visible the gaps that our women leaders have encountered in foreign policy in their efforts to empower women and girls and steady the balance for gender equality.
